

HISTORY OF THE NFPA STANDARDS COUNCIL

Compiled by the Office of the Secretary to the NFPA Standards Council
NFPA Headquarters, Quincy, MA USA
Last Updated: 13 May 2014

The NFPA Standards Council is the primary oversight body in the NFPA codes and standards making process. This 13 member body typically meets 3 times each year and its traditionally heavy workload is a legacy in the NFPA system. The Standards Council reports directly to the NFPA Board of Directors, and Council members are appointed by the Board.

Throughout its history the name of the Standards Council has changed several times, but their duties have generally remained the same. Association's codes and standards development activities, administer the rules and regulations, and acts as an appeals body. The genesis of today's Standards Council can be traced back to the early 1930s.

At that time, the technical committees made-up of experts flourished and their activities were directly overseen by the Board of Directors. By 1930, the association had created 87 different standards addressing a wide range of technical topics, and had established a similar number of technical committees to administer these subjects.

This resulted in an appreciable workload for the Board of Directors, and at their meeting on 14 January 1933 in Atlantic City, NJ, they took action to create a Committee on Technical Committee Procedure as an advisory committee to the Board to assist with oversight of the codes and standards process. This was the original NFPA Standards Council, and their assigned duties are similar to those of the Council today. This original advisory committee was comprised of five Board members, and their charter was to recommend the following to the Board of Directors for final approval:

- (1) Desirability and need of setting up new technical committees;
- (2) Desirability and need of initiating new projects by existing technical committees;
- (3) Personnel appointments to technical committees, including additions and changes;
- (4) Review of scopes of existing technical committees to prevent overlap;
- (5) Advisability of discontinuing unnecessary and inactive technical committees;
- (6) Acceptability of emergency revisions of documents submitted by technical committees; and
- (7) Desirability and need for submitting NFPA documents to the American Standards Association (ANSI today) for adoption.

TIMELINE

- 1933 - Committee on Technical Committee Procedure established as an interim Board advisory committee.
1936 - Committee on Technical Committee Procedure made a standing committee to the Board.
1953 - Name revised to the Technical Advisory Committee
1974 - Name revised to the Standards Council, comprised of 9 members, 5 of who would be Board members.
1980 - Standards Council membership changed to 13 members, none of whom are Board members.

Each year the committee was re-appointed on an interim basis until 1936, when the Board of Directors made it a permanent standing committee reporting directly to them. It continued in this role until 1953, when the name of the committee changed to the Technical Advisory Committee. In 1962 the membership of the committee increased to six members, and a staff Secretary was formally appointed and included as a non-voting member. From 1962 through 1973, the membership of the committee varied between six and nine members during any given year.

At their meeting on 5 February 1974, the NFPA Board of Directors changed the name of the Technical Advisory Committee to the NFPA Standards Council. The group continued to report to the Board in an advisory capacity, and the duties remained similar to those assigned to the original committee in 1933. However, the membership was altered to be specifically comprised of 9 members, 5 of whom would also be simultaneously serving on the NFPA Board.

In 1980, the Board of Directors made various noteworthy changes to the Association's Bylaws and Regulations, including the distinct clarification that the Standards Council would be the issuers of all new and revised editions of NFPA documents. In addition, the membership of the Standards Council was increased from 10 to 13 members (that would serve a three year term with eligibility to be re-appointed to a second three year term), and revised such that no Board members could concurrently also serve as a Council member.

Since 1980, no further fundamental changes have occurred to the NFPA Standards Council, other than the appointment in 1991 of a staff Recording Secretary with non-voting status, and the staggering of terms initiative that started in 2001 to return new Council appointments to two in-coming members each year.
